For this vertical slice of our proposal, we worked on implementing a mass rename feature, which is something Google Drive currently lacks. We learned rough visual design from the prototype. We thought about the placement of key features in order to make it more intuitive and follow previously established conventions within Google Drive. We also learned how each piece of the application functions would work on a grander scale. In future iterations, we will work on fine-tuning the design to ensure its consistency throughout the application to avoid jarring context changes.
